Whistleblowing as Legal Duty and Right

Peter Bowal

Professor of Law, Haskayne School of Business University of Calgary

Friday, 9 January 2009, 1:00 - 2:00 pm
Room 303, 3/F KK Leung Building, University of Hong Kong

Professor Peter Bowal will discuss: how whistleblowing is generally regulated; issues and problems with regulation; whistleblowing as a legal “duty” and whistleblowing as a human “right”.

Peter earned a Bachelor of Commerce (With Distinction) from the University of Alberta (1980), a Bachelor of Laws from Osgoode Hall Law School in Toronto (1982), and a Master of Laws in Comparative Law and Legal Philosophy from the University of Cambridge in 1986, with Honours. In 1983, he underwent Articles of Clerkship with the Alberta Court of Appeal and was admitted to the Law Society of Alberta the same year. Following several years of law practice and teaching, he started at the University of Calgary, in 1991. Peter has published in quality Canadian and international law journals and numerous professional publications. His primary field of research interest is employment law, and in particular, the legal regulation of whistleblowing. He has taught whistleblowing and employment law courses in the law schools at the University of Western Ontario and Michigan State University.
