E-Trade (re)gains practical importance in the international context. Technological developments (i.e. next generation networks) facilitate the execution of e-transactions and technical measures can more easily be handled. International E-Trade rules are discussed under the auspices of the WTO; some progress has been achieved, but substantial work still needs to be done, particularly in the field of classification (goods/services). The UN Convention on the Use of Electronic Communications in International Contracts is now open for ratification and gives a reasonable framework for private law predictability.

Professor Rolf H. Weber is Chair Professor for Business and International Economic Law at the University of Zurich and practicing attorney in Zurich. His main fields of teaching and research are banking and capital market law, IT, Internet- and Media Law, WTO law, antitrust and corporations.
